It's now 430 in the morning and the tellers read their engine past my house. I could hear it barely ever music, but I could hear it. Hear that. Oh, and then I could feel this the I could literally feel the ground underneath my feet. That's pretty It's 430 in the morning on morning. I'm I'm a owl, and I'm staying up programming. I'm actually working out deviations of a sample range. So I'm actually kind of working out some statistics to calculate some some, some cellular data that I've that I acquired and that I downloaded it's open data. It's free. stuff, but I'm doing sample rates of and longitude. I'm formulating a deviation. So membranes a little fried. But that's pretty
